Genesis 1:24-31

We should not miss the significance of the presence of the Trinity at the creation of humanity. Scripture quotes the Godhead, “Let us make . . . in our image” (v. 26). As the Godhead creates and forms humanity: body, soul, and spirit, so also do all three persons of the Trinity participate. We are designed in community for the purposes of community and communion with God and with one another.

From our creation forward, we are co-creators with Christ and that invitation does not end with our conception or our birth or even our salvation. God invites us to continue to co-create with Him: to create spaces for community, to care for creation, to create new life in succeeding generations, to create spaces of peace where community has been broken, and on and on. The possibilities for how God creates opportunities for us to participate with Him are limitless.

Take a moment to look around and see where you are being invited to participate with God in the activity of God.
